However, with social media we can also learn about important social and political issues around the world. One example is Kimiko Hirata, who fights against climate change through her nonprofit organization Climate Integrate and by using social media. She helped stop the construction of 13 new coal power plants in Japan. All of this would have been much more difficult without social media.

However, with social media we can also learn about important social and political issues around the world. One example is climate change. Through social media, young people can see photos, watch videos, and read personal stories from different countries affected by extreme weather. They can also learn how people are trying to reduce waste, save energy, and protect nature in their own communities. In this way, social media can help students connect global problems with their own lives.
